Listeria monocytogenes is a gram-positive pathogen that causes listeriosis, a severe infectious disease, in humans and animals. It is very important to control the pathogen to prevent listeriosis. The first genome information for L. monocytogenes is derived from raw chicken's sample, which is the same sample where our previous study using amplified fragment length polymorphism (AFLP) analysis demonstrated the presence of isolates that were highly related to each other and highly different from isolates obtained from other sample types.
